Kevin Robb

Kevin Robb is an accomplished metal sculptor based in Colorado, USA. He is a graduate of Rocky Mountain College of Art and Design in Denver, CO with major studies in both Sculpture and Graphic Design. The artist brings a natural curiosity to his work, pushing the boundary of possibility to continually seek and discover. His work reflects a deep understanding of the relationship between positive and negative spaces, using his medium to showcase the intersection of shadow and light. In 2004 Robb suffered a massive stroke that left him physically challenged and unable to speak. Without words and only one usable arm, his team of assistants follow his lead to bring his artistic vision to reality. His ideas continue to find space in the world, free-flowing and unreserved. Under his watchful eye, each piece maintains the utmost commitment to quality to ensure a lasting testament to beauty and artistic passion. His work is held in corporate, private, university, and public collections all over the world. Most notably including Butler Institute of American Art, Phipps Conservatory, and Frank Lloyd Wright's Falling Water Estate. Robb and his miraculous story of dedication, passion, and remarkable life's work was featured on a CNN Special with Dr. Sanjay Gupta.
